"Last Spring. I was taken down with Last Spring. I was taken down with La Grippe. At these I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete. It is truly a wonderful medicine."—W. H. WILLIAMS, Crook City, S. D.

fore a jury of twelve, says the Brooklyn Eagle. A member of the jury died during his trial. The prisoner's counsel agreed with the district attorney that the trial should continue before eleven jurors and that no record of the death of one of their number should be entered on the minutes of the court. The prisoner was convicted and sentenced to punishment. An appeal was afterward taken to the effect that neither his counsel nor the district attorney nor the court nor the prisoner had a right to waive the latter's right to a trial by twelve jurors. The conviction was set aside for that reason. As, however, nothing in the record showed in a formal and official way that the trial occurred and that the verdict was rendered by less than twelve jurors, it was also held that the man had been put once is jeopardy and could not be put twice in the same position. He was, therefore, discharged. He was thus tried and not tried, found guilty and not found guilty, convicted and practically acquitted same proceeding. The contention was that every man indicted and tried for crime previous to his arraigument, and everyone who might be so indicted and so tried after his arraignment had an interest in his trial by twelve jurors, a right to his trial by twelve jurors, and that when he waived his own right he impaired their right in their trial and their right in his trial, and that the thing could not be permitted. This illustrates how a man holds some of his rights in trust for all the past and for all the future. Of such rights he divest blugself and cannot be
